COMMENTS FROM THE OFFICE OF THE TOWN MANAGER

A new force main for the sewage has been laid up Mill Hill and is proceeding across the Common. The Bridge Construction Company has retained the services of Mr. Swan, who maintains the grounds for us, to assist in removing soil and helping them in general to cross the Common, doing as little damage as possible.

Considerable progress has been made at the plant site this last week. This is not as noticeable to the general public, due to its location, as the work in the streets which is much more obvious to the most of us.

The new international truck which was ordered last spring is now having the snow plow equipment installed. We should have it by the first of the week.

Due to the uncertainty of the funding of the Emergency Employment Program under which he was hired, Mr. Emmons, the second police officer we have had for a year left to accept employment elsewhere. We did not have funds in the regular Police account to pay him from that source.

TELSTAR IS 196 WINNER IN FOOTBALL OPENER

Bethel Telstar Regional High School scored a touchdown in each of the first three periods to defeat Mrs. Cushman 19-6 Saturday afternoon in Mountain Valley Center game action.

Telstar's winning score came in the second stanza as fullback Levi Brown went one yard for the score. The point after by Glenn Olson and the upshots. The game was set up by a ball pass from center to quarterback attempted to punt, going Telstar the ball on the one yard line.

Telstar edged its margin to 19-6 in the third period as the Eagles eliminated their 50 yard drive with quarterback Pete Hickey's two yard run. Running backs Wayne Gaudin, Paul Farrow, and Brown were responsible for most of the yardage in this drive. The point of the attempt was wide.

Bethel's second score of the contest in the fourth period made it 19-6 as he punted one yard for the touchdown. Again the conversion attempt failed.

Telstar dominated the game as the visitors couldn't get much of an attack underway. Playing outstanding defensive games for Telstar were Frank Howard, Tim Rosenberg, and Brady Olson.

GREENWOOD CITY

— Mrs. Collis Morgan, Corres. —

Autumn is echoing across the valley. One cannot doubt it for although the fields are still green the asters and goldenrod contribute much of autumn's pageant of color. The bitterness of nightshade is overshadowed by this color but will soon come into its own with ruby-red berries.

I have heard the owl hoot in the evening dusk across the pond this week.

School days are here again and there's always something exciting about it. Children enter to find themselves another year older and wiser, another grade up, new teachers, new friends, new studies, and new fun. Yes, it is an exciting time and autumn takes over for its harbingers are surely here.

On an evening which was merging slowly into night, Doris and I pushed NYMPH out into the pond. We fished and watched the pale pink afterglow that tinted the quiet waters of the pond.

A few ducks flew low beyond the pickered weeds and talked contentedly. Here a world of beauty to enjoy, fragrant with the scent of the evening air. It was an interval when nothing destroyed the rural peace which we shared.

"I love the time of evening when the sun is sinking low,
And the twilight fast is stealing on the whole wide world below",
Garrett Schultz

We drifted or rowed slowly up pond to where we planned to anchor for a few hours.

"It is not the reel, nor the rod and fly,
It's the great outdoors that's the reason why—
Away from business with its grids and cares,
Alone with God in that great somewhere's".

J. C. Glassford
Time passed and we took our place off the rocks.

There was mystery in the shadowy woods and the night grew cool with a mist like cobwebs rising beyond us.

Overcast Mountain crouched against the horizon and even as we looked the light faded. Its figure which a few moments ago was clearly visible became indistinguishable and other objects seemed to take a different shape.

Now and then a night hawk circled above, cutting through the air and shaping his course.

There was something unreal about the twilight. It was enchanting and so quiet; as if the world had been reborn during the coming of darkness.

A single star appeared and twinkled its presence, shining above, reflecting below. Lights in some of the houses now blinked like night eyes. One by one, then in countless numbers the stars came. The Big Dipper swung low in the north. In the long eternity of time the stars remind us of man's insignificance.

Summer didn't take the mosquitoes for at times they buzzed around us; while the young bull in the pasture on the hill added his bellow to the night.

The sky was dark velvet, sprinkled with diamonds.

Almost minute by minute we could feel the air change as it grew cooler. A few times when our eyes wandered over the lonely silence a car flashed its lights beyond the trees.

It grew late and I pulled up anchor and started rowing toward home. After some time in the darkness "feeling our way", Doris flashed on her light. We were entering a patch of weeds which looked like a forest with drifting mist like smoking incense hanging overhead. Then a sudden and loud splash as some animal disappeared beneath the surface, as surprised as we were! What it was we'll never know.

In a short time we pulled in our boat and fastened it for the night. We weren't rich in fish but we'd had a quiet, peaceful evening where we could watch the stars and marvel at the astral spaces of the universe that is ours.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Holt and Danny, Windsor, were here Sunday to visit with his people: parents, uncle, brother, sister, and others. Callers this week at Mr. and Mrs.

Clyde Morgan's were: Mr. and Mrs. Carl Brooks, West Paris; Ruth Hastings, South Paris; Doris Hayes, local.

Mr. and Mrs. Norman Millett and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Coffin spent the week end in Bangor. They also visited Cadillac Mountain before returning home.

Letter to the Editor
Dear Citizens of S. A. D. 41:
School bells are ringing again and that means that everyone is thinking about their child's education. There are some exciting things happening in our district this year. One of them is the Individualized Instruction program in Andover. I will be taking Bethel parents up to the Andover school to observe the program for two reasons: (1) for our own knowledge of what's happening in education today, and (2) to see if this is the kind of advantage we want for our children in Bethel. If you would like a ride to Andover or if you have any questions, please call me.

Your representative,
Peggy Crockett
Riverside Lane, Town
Sept. 10, 1972
To the Bethel Oxford County Citizens

"Thank you for using my letter last Thursday.
In order to quiet any disturbance of a grammatical thought, let me explain that in using the term "advantage" in that letter, I was thinking of spiritual activity.
An active verb," says the grammarian, "must have an object." In the Bible verse mentioned, Micah 6:8, the object is not visible in every instance.
"To love mercy." There is an active verb with its object. "To do justice" is a phrase implying the object which could be work or thinking, and "to walk humbly with thy God" is surely a very active prayer with an understood object.
Logically, if not grammatically,
Yours,
Inna H. Thompson

KIMBALL FAMILY REUNION

Over 200 descendants of Richard Kimball of Ipswich, Mass., gathered at N. H. Highway Motel, Concord, N. H., for their annual reunion on Aug. 19. They came from all the New England states, New York, New Jersey, Virginia, Washington, D. C., Nebraska, Kansas, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Florida, Belgium, Ontario, and New Brunswick, Canada.

President Herbert E. Kimball, Rochester, N. H., and his daughters, Mrs. Linda K. Hall, and Mrs. Sandra K. Walker, were directors of the excellent hobby show which filled Pierce Convention Hall for viewing between ten and four o'clock.

The Kimballs exhibited both collections and creative arts, ranging from silver made by master silversmith Durgin of Concord, N. H., during 1700's, to children's toys, hooked rugs, Christmas decorations, antique furniture, china, silver, and glass, small motors, table decorations, silver and copper jewelry, enamel on copper items, Bibles, paintings, fans, old eye glasses, minerals (Maine), button hooks, Valentines, cook books, and old Kimball letters.

Russell Kimball, had charge of registration; Mrs. Mary Champe, Mrs. Estella K. Martin, Mrs. Jeanette Kimball, and Stanley Howe, assisted with genealogical information. Mrs. Elizabeth K. Watkins showed the Kimball Reunion pictures, and clippings records, in her role as historian.

President Kimball presided over the afternoon business meeting, and the program opened with singing of the Kimball Song (composed by Mildred K. Whitaker, 1971, and who was introduced), and led by Frank Kimball, Wind Lake, Wis. Slides of the Benjamin Kimball Castle, Gileford, N. H., were shown with narration by Stephen Emerson, Gileford. Greetings were read from Senator Florence B. Reynolds, Omaha, Nebraska, who was detained at the last moment by family illness, and to whom a gift of the History of General John Stark by Leon Anderson, N. H. Legislative Historian, was sent. Regrets came from Thomas L. Kimball, executive director National Wildlife Federation, the 1970 speaker. Shirley Kimball Merrill, Mayor of Lebanon, N. H., was introduced, as were all officers, and Dr. Charles N. Kimball, first reunion speaker, and director.

John Hancock Kimball, chairman of incorporation committee, read the report on this, and the Association is now officially incorporated in Oxford County, Maine.

Nominating committee chairman, Robert W. Kimball, past president, Hampton, N. H., presented the report, and the acting secretary, Elizabeth Carter (in the absence of Mildred K. Fitts) cast one ballot for the unanimous election of the following: President John Hancock Kimball, Lynnfield, Mass. and York Harbor, Maine; Vice Presidents, Mrs. Estella K. Martin, Rumford Point, Russell Kimball, Greenville, and Mrs. Judith Kimball, Kittery, was introduced as speaker, and gave a delightful talk on "Days of Witchcraft" full of fascinating historical details.

Gifts were presented retiring President and Mrs. Kimball, Mrs. Judith Kimball, John Hancock Kimball, as well as awarding of gifts donated by members of some fifty Kimballs including 30 teens and tots.

A highlight of the program was the introduction of the Norman Heber G. Kimball Family Association Representation, charming Jane Hales, husband Fred Hales, and their five children, Binghamton, N. H. Mrs. Hales brought a brief greeting, and the children sang a special genealogical song of greeting. Youngest Kimball at reunion was seven months old, Holly Hales.

TELSTAR R. H. S. NEWS

STUDENT COUNCIL
News that school has started again on the Student Council will occupy this space to inform the public as to the activities of the students at Telstar. The first day of school had its usual mass confusion with the scheduling but things have settled themselves out by now. The students have certainly been busy in all their classes because the school has been rather cold. There seems to be a heating problem.

At our opening rally the new seventh graders were a little unprepared but at the next one I'm sure they'll be ready to yell. Saturday seemed to be a three-way sweep for the school. The football team won over Meenahoon and the cross-country team did also. The band conquered the weather and were able to perform their half time routine without any trouble. The girls' field hockey team is looking good but hasn't had a game yet. It would be nice to have a few more girls out but just the same the team's spirit is great. Thanks to the Varsity Rebels Club the girls will have field hockey shoes this season.

Enrollments in Band and Drama Club have increased greatly over last year. You can expect to be hearing a lot more about these two groups in the future. Most of the clubs are just getting under way this week so we haven't any news from them at this time. Sharon Dunham was.

School has begun and the middle of September is on us. Norway fair next week and the trees are starting to turn. That makes us think that winter is near at hand. All the garden crops must be harvested and its time to button up the buildings for the cold weather ahead. September always brings a little tang in the air which makes one realize that it is not many moons away before warmer clothes will have to be dug out and donned to keep from freezing. Let's all go to Hawaii.

Mr. and Mrs. Ellis Davis were in Norway Friday and called on Elizabeth Russ at the Norway hospital. They learned she was being moved to Cozy Inn nursing home in the afternoon. We hope people will call on her. It would make it pleasant for Mrs. Russ.

Our schools use hundreds of things that are made from oil: desk tops and fiberglass seats, educational films, tapes and records, paint, ink... even the erasers on pencils.

But most of all, schools use energy. For heat, light and transportation, 75% of all our energy comes from oil and natural gas (including 40% of our electricity).

But today, we're using these petroleum fuels faster than we are finding them. That's why America faces an Energy Gap.

"THREATER" PRESENTED PERFORMANCES IN EDINBURGH, SCOTLAND

"Threater," a young traveling acting company based in Bryant Pond, climaxed its second season with two weeks of performances on the Fringe of the Edinburgh International Festival in Scotland. The three person theater presented its original story theater play, "The Adventures of the Incomparable Mulla Nasrudin," from Aug. 28 to Sept. 9 at Edinburgh's Unnamed Theatre.

The twenty-sixth annual Edinburgh International Festival hosted artists from Belgium, Italy, Germany, Japan, Poland and the United Kingdom. The independently organized Festival Fringe simultaneously presents an equally diverse collection of attractions in an "off-broadway" atmosphere. Threater is one of two independent American companies appearing on this year's Fringe.

Threater prepared "The Adventures of the Incomparable Mulla Nasrudin" from the legends, jokes and stories surrounding the Persian mystic clown, the Mulla (or Master) Nasrudin. The exploits of this folk hero are among the favorite jokes of the Near East. Threater presents the Nasrudin Tales in story theater style, using narration, mime, song and actor's improvisation to illustrate the Mulla's marvelous adventures.

Peter Crockett, Masha Stackman and Gordon Talley, the three young actors who make up the company, first began working together in 1963 with the Boston Free Theatre, Inc.

History of Androscoggin River shows years of service, beauty

by Mearle M. Brown

The Androscoggin River, whether it was sired by the White Mountains or a tributary of the Kennebec (titles given it by Robert La Follette) is some river all that.

After 200 years of abuse it is pleasing to the sight, if not taste and smell; and for its odor we have only ourselves to blame. No one even years ago, could have seen or realized what big mess was going to do to the Androscoggin.

Engineers have estimated it cost nearly $40,000,000 to clean up Berlin and Gorham, and that is just a start, one comes down to the Androscoggin, Rumford, Dixfield, Jay, Livermore Falls, Gulf Island, Auburn, Lewiston, Lisbon Falls, Pipepscut and Brunswick. Add to these the manufacturers on the Little Androscoggin of Norway-Paris and Mechanic Falls and it adds up to one big mess, to clean up.

In spite of all these polluters, the Androscoggin flows through some of the most beautiful country in the world.

We have skated on it in winter and travelled it in summer, by boat and walking along the Indian trails, and we know there is none lovelier. One trip to the Maybanks, in Paris, in the spring was worth a whole winter's wait, and that is just a smaller section of a tributary's to the Androscoggin.

The river starts at Umbagog Lake, one of the Rangeley Lake chain and flows 175 miles to end in Tidewater Merrymeeting Bay, all mixed up with the Kennebec and several other smaller rivers (an ignominious ending for such a lovely river).

Leaving Umbagog which by the way is still partly in Maine, contrary to the historians it swings into New Hampshire but hitting the White Mts., changes its mind and comes back into Maine at Gilead, proceeds to cross to Bethel, Rumford and Dixfield, turning south at Livermore Falls.

In this stretch can be seen some of the finest riverbottom farms in the state. Up to this time Maine has been more interested in industry than in farming or recreation and so no appreciable amount of money has been allocated by legislature to keep the Androscoggin free of pollution, which is a pity as it is now a most formidable task to accomplish.

There are many dams and falls as the river has a drop of 1245 feet in its 175 miles run to the sea; many are natural formations and some were made by that great god, Money. The natural falls are some of the most beautiful in the state.

There were at least seven Indian tribes who made their homes on the banks of the Androscoggin hunting and fishing, going to the coast in the spring and back into the forests in the winter. The most prominent one, at least the one most mentioned, was the Abnaki tribe who named the river, the Anascoggin, meaning "fish that come in the spring."

For many years the anadromous fish played a great part in the history of the Androscoggin and Maine, until the man made obstructions prevented their going to their natural spawning grounds; and not too long ago Atlantic salmon had a bed below the falls at Lewiston, the same as the

Only US Ram had its origin in the Roman Galleys

By Everett K. Martin

On March 9, 1862, the USS Monitor, a brainchild of John Ericsson, with two cannon in a revolving turret and a girdle of five inches of armor on the hull and eight on the turret, put a quick end to the field day which the Confederates' Virginia, (nee the United States Ship Merrimack) had had the day before.

The Confederate naval brains had salvaged the Merrimack, sunk by Union forces when they evacuated the Norfolk Navy Yard, and had bundled her in iron and changed her name.

On March 8, 1862, the Virginia steamed out to try conclusions with the blockading squadrons of the Union. Union shot bounced harmlessly off the iron coat of the Virginia as the latter rammed the US Sloop Cumberland and then finished her off with gunfire. She sank from there the ironclad took on the Union frigate Congress and forced it to surrender.

The ironclad just couldn't be beaten.

But when news of the Confederates' salvage and redesign of the old Merrimack reached the Union navy, it knew something had to be done, so the plans Ericsson had offered Napoleon III for a vessel to be used in the Crimean War were dusted off and when he offered the Monitor to the Union navy, they joyfully took it to their bosom.

While the Virginia, nee Merrimack, was raising hell on March 8, the Monitor was even then steaming to the scene of action, and when the Virginia appeared next morning to have some more fun with those old wooden ships, she found out she was up against something else and there occurred the historic battle that took place at point blank range for the entire day without either one drawing blood. The South's threat to the blockade had been knocked out and the United States decided on construction of more ships like the Monitor, although being a ship of but two feet freeboard, its use for the most part had to be confined to coastal waters, for coastal defense. The engines of this craft were safe below water level it was heavily armored, and the principle of the turret guns was a new one. But to look back, and maybe ahead, a little, this idea of ramming ships which the Virginia had so dramatically spread on the canvass of the naval action of the Civil War was not new, nor would it be entirely abandoned until some years later.

While the Union forces used no rams as such during the war, the Confederates reportedly had others.

But the Monitor was a new concept which years later appeared again in a varied form at just about the close of any naval fighting, a type of battle which was widely practiced in the days centuries before Christ but gradually grew of small use as ships improved, gunnery came into being, armament made great advances, and battle ships could either stand off and shell each other at further or closer range, or resort to the ancient but still popular custom of going alongside, boarding, and fighting it out on deck.

This idea of ramming soft bellied ships was apparently born centuries ago in the Mediterranean where in naval engagements the early galleys, manned by two or three banks of oars, sometimes even more, and armed with the deadly metal or metal-sheathed beak, tried for first advantage by ramming their adversaries.

The impact of a fairly large and heavy wooden ship smashing into another under full propulsion by heavy muscled rowers was apt to be pretty much equally disastrous. Sometimes the attacker would try to back away from the heeled-over victim and get its beak free before the adversary ship rolled back. In other types of warfare the drawbridge arrangement, or corvus, was found for instance in the Roman bireme or trireme, was dropped from its vertical position onto the deck of the enemy vessel, where a huge spike, thrusting through the deck, held the ships together while marines boarded, and the battle became more like fighting on land, with hand to hand sword work, arrow fire and the like.

With the inauguration of the ram, a new type of sea battle was developed in which ships, powered by strong backed oarsmen, skilled and trained to instant response to commands, maneuvered for position from which they could crash their pointed rams into the bellies of enemy vessels; maneuvering in much the same way that centuries later, ships powered by sails maneuvered to gain position for pouring broadsides into the hulls and rigging of enemy ships.

As the centuries passed, innovations appeared and progress was made in naval fighting. There came a time when the ram yielded in importance to a beak extending out from the prow of the galley. When an attacking galley was maneuvered so that the beak, in the position, somewhat, of the bowsprit in later sailing vessels, overhung the deck of the enemy ship, attacking marines could use it as a bridge to gain the enemy decks for the boarding and fighting which for centuries, up to comparatively modern times, the 17th, 18th and 19th century, remained the favorite method of engagement at sea for many navies, and of course, for the pirate crews who roamed the seas far and wide for ships and slaves and booty.

Boarding could also be accomplished by bringing a trireme alongside an enemy vessel and using the outrigger platform of the upper banks of oars as a spring board to swarm to the decks of the enemy vessel. The oar of the attacking vessel were withdrawn on the boarding side, while at the same time the ship sheared off the oars in the opposing vessel.

The centuries brought changes in fighting at sea as the catapult and the arrow engine made it possible to hurl their projectiles at an enemy well before the boarding maneuver, and there later came the era when Greek fire hurled onto the enemy deck, and the fire ship, made the ram just about obsolete.

When Rome's western possessions were swallowed up by invading barbarians in the fifth century AD, her naval might was smashed and the fleets once stationed in the western Mediterranean vanished. In the Eastern Mediterranean, her rule was carried on by the Byzantine Empire which ruled supreme on the seas until the rise of Turkish power and the capture of Constantinople in 1453. The Turks had a navy which was peerless until the big Italian city states of the Middle Ages began their era of widespread merchant shipping and naval might.

The Byzantine warship was the two banked dromon, the prime weapon of which was not the ram, but fire.

Like all earlier warships the dromons had prows which jutted forward to end in a ram, but it was no longer a major weapon.

Still, over the centuries, almost into the 20th century, the concept of the ram as a naval weapon died slowly, and although it was all but lifeless, it persisted up to the Civil War, when the Confederate Navy, as we have seen, used the method.

Even other navies insisted on a strengthened or reinforced bow into a ponderous sort of ram because of the amazed interest engendered when at the battle of Lissa 1866, an Austrian battleship rammed and sank one of the newest and best of armor vessels in the Italian Navy.

That was enough, coupled with the initial performance of the old Merrimack, now in Virginia, of the Confederate Navy, to keep naval designers toying with the idea of the ram.

Armored ships were then anywhere near the solid steel battle wagons of navies of the 20th Century, armor was usually a girder which surrounded and protected the upper part of the hull of a vessel to water level but didn't do much for it below that area. The bellies of ships were still apt to be wood with copper or comparatively thin iron or steel sheathing.

Not until the submarine became a powerful instrument of war and torpedo could be made to attack underwater instead of plowing along the surface, armor extend deeper, finally the solid steel evolved.

Hence, Navy brass designers of the Civil years and those immediately following could be pardoned for looking back to the days of the speedy, maneuverable trireme as toying with a ship design which could take on an enemy and avoid its fire in a way possible and go smashing sink the opponent with power and tough ram.

The most unique craft of the US Navy in 1896, according to the Industrial and Statistics of Maine for 1900, was the Ammen Ram Katabdin, designed for defense purposes, built by Bath Iron Works in 1893 and launched in 1893.

No vessel like the Katabdin had ever been built, and one been built according to information of Nathan Lipfert of the Marine Museum. She was the zenith of her class, was obsolete when she was built. The development of efficient, long-range made rams useless. The design of her hull had made several tributes to the early submarines.

The Katabdin designated in the Industrial and Statistics for Maine for 1900 as Ammen Ram Katabdin, obsolescence, even

was being launched, might well be put down to delay and paper work, for she was actually designed at a time when a ram might still have some use in naval warfare. She was entirely the fruit of American ingenuity, the original idea having been conceived by Admiral Daniel Ammen of the US Navy prior to his being placed on the retired list in 1878. The design was worked out and improved by the Bureau of Construction and Repairs, and elaborated from time to time until January 1891 when the contract for building the vessel was let. The author is indebted for much information regarding the Katahdin to Nathan

Lipfert of the Marine Research Society of Bath, Bath, Maine, home of the Bath Iron Works. The information is succinct and of great interest. Mr. Lipfert points out that there were two U.S. Naval vessels named Katahdin, one a gunboat and the other the ironclad ram designed by Admiral Ammen. Regarding the first, Mr. Lipfert wrote:

"There was a gunboat Katahdin: 507 tons; length 158 feet; beam 28 feet; draught 10 feet three inches. Launched by Larabee and Allen, Bath, Maine, on October 12, 1861, it was commissioned at the Boston Navy Yard on February 17, 1862 with Lt. George Henry Preble in command. She saw action in the Civil War and was decommissioned July 14, 1865. She was sold at New York on November 30 and documented as 'Juno' on October 20, 1866."

The second Katahdin was designated an ironclad ram: 2,155 tons; length 250 feet nine inches; beam 43 feet 5 inches; draught 15 feet one inch; speed 17 knots; complement 97 men; armed with four six-pounder rifles. She was launched by the Bath Iron Works, Bath, Maine, one February 4, 1893, sponsored by Miss Una Soley, daughter of the Assistant Secretary of the Navy. The Bath Iron Works had been the only firm to bid on the contract, and had obtained it for $930,000. The vessel was designed by Rear Admiral Daniel Ammen, although the addition of the guns was not his idea and was, in fact, opposed by him. One workman was killed in the construction of the Katahdin when a large steel plate fell on him.

The BIW expended a great deal of effort on this vessel, but, when she was delivered, she was still one half knot short of the 17 knots in her specifications; the Navy refused to accept her. Because of her experimental nature, Congress passed a special act enabling the Navy to accept delivery of the Katahdin as it was.

"The Katahdin," says Lipfert, "was not, of course, the first ram. There have been rams as long as there have been fighting navies. She had forced ventilation because her hull was almost completely under water, but the monitors had that during the Civil War. She was experimental in that she ran mostly awash, with only her pilot house, stack and a little of her deck gear above water. She was supposed to deliver a blow of 56,000 foot tons. The 'Scientific American' called her the 'first vessel of our new navy built solely to be used as a ram'. 'Cradle of Ships' by G. L. Askew, calls the Katahdin the 'last ram of the navy'. No vessel like the Katahdin had ever been built, nor has one been built since.

"She was the zenith of her class but she was obsolete when she was built. The development of efficient, long-range artillery made rams useless. The design of her hull, however, did make several contributions to the features of early submarines."

"The Katahdin was commissioned at the New York Navy Yard on February 20, 1896 with Comdr. Richard P. Leary in command. She left New York Harbor on March 4, 1897, and sailed to Norfolk before decommissioning at the Philadelphia Navy Yard on April 17. A year later, with a war with Spain seeming imminent, she was recommissioned there on March 10, 1898. She was assigned to the North Atlantic Squadron and operated along the coast from New England to Virginia. Of course, she saw no action. At the end of the war, the Katahdin decommissioned for the last time at the Philadelphia Navy Yard on October 8.

"She was struck from the Navy List on July 9, 1909, and designated 'Ballistic Experimental Target 'A''; the Katahdin was sunk by gunfire at Rappahannock Spit, Virginia, in September.

"The CSS Virginia (former Merrimack) was designated an ironclad ram, and used her ability to ram as well as her guns. The Monitor, however, was the first of a class of vessels known as monitors. They were not rams; their advantage lay in their moveable turrets, large guns

(2 11-inch Dahlgren smoothbores) and thick armor (18 inches on the turret)."

It is appropriate to append some salient details of how the Ammen Ram Katahdin was built and how it was designed to operate.

The only bidder on the contract to construct the vessel was the Bath Iron Works, which was awarded the contract signed January 28, 1891. The bid was $930,000 for the hull and machinery, the speed to be knots, with a premium of $15,000 for each quarter knot in excess of that rate shown in a trial of two consecutive hours.

Instead of the usual simulations should the vessel not come up to speed requirements, it was to be rejected altogether if the knot speed was not attained.

As noted, the vessel missed the specified speed by only a fraction of a mile, and Congress voted acceptance of the ram.

The ram with her bunk full and ready for sea had a maximum draft of 16 feet. She was designed when prepared for an engagement to be partly submerged by the valves, one in each transverse compartment, with sloping valves in the vertical keel also in the longitudinal compartments.

The peculiar construction of her frame gave this vessel tremendous strength and of resistance. She was framed on the longitudinal system had eleven "Longitudinal" or keels, two feet high and five feet apart, running whole length of her, focusing like a bundle of steel behind her steel prow.

This gave the ram's way of attack the strength of other (one of her ten brothers and sisters) bet me I could sing a yodel. So I sang it at the shows at Lewiston and won first prize. I was engaged to be married, at 15, to do daily work at WCOU. with her husband, Hal "Lone Pine", with whom she entertained in big towns, small towns, cities. Later, marital difficulties were to emerge.

But now Betty Cody is not traveling. She is "semi-retired" and cares for her 86 year young Mother, coming out occasionally to perform. She sews a lot, because clothes are so hard to buy for her petite figure and listens to opera and classical music, which she loves. Bookings come and go.

"I want you to tell the truth. I have been to Wallingford (Conn.) many times, but I have to take a bus. I can't afford plane fare and my health finally could not bear the long trip by bus."

The people in the "business" want her back. They contend that she has raised her four sons and it is time for her to come back. Ask Betty Cody about her sons and she bubbles. "They range from age 31 to 17. They're after me all the time to go back. I never pushed my sons at all into show business. They developed their own talent."

Talent is a bland adjective for her oldest son, Lenny Breau, who is known throughout the Dominion of Canada as a fantastic guitarist. His preference is progressive jazz, but he plays everything from Arabian to flamenco. His Mother says, "He's soft-spoken...plays so gently. I cannot believe he is my son when I hear him play." He is known as the guitarist with the velvet touch.

Dicky has no desire to be in the business. Denny is currently a guitarist with the Flairs, who entertain at the Roundhouse in Auburn. Bobby is the youngest at seventeen and a football, baseball and hockey enthusiast. He attends Edward Little H.S. Her eyes soften. "They're all great guys. All gentlemen. They're all very tender and take good care of me."

Still with all the encouragement to return, Betty Cody is a little reluctant. She loves the business, but still, are people still interested in a singer who's first recording was in 1952 on a 78 rpm in Montreal? She wonders and sometimes the doubt is there. The Montreal recording session was really supposed to be that of Hal Lone Pine's who had made a tape of Prince Edward Island. A Mr. Joseph, then President of RCA (Victor) asked what she did. She explained and he wanted to hear her sing. Ray Couture, a band member, and comedian, had written the lyrics to a song. Betty added a tune with a yodel. "I don't know music at all, so I didn't WRITE it. I don't know...it had a lot of minor chords in it, so I called it the Tom Tom Yodel. Mr. Joseph came in and said they were signing me up. That's how I started recording." About 25 singles on the Marital difficulties emerged after the birth of their third son. "I don't know what happened. We traveled for years and years. I'll never know. It just soured." The couple finished a contract with a national network. "It was then 1953 and Wheeling, West Virginia called. Betty and her husband worked there and then on to Schenectady, N.Y. where their Bobby was born. "My last venture was in Winnipeg, Manitoba. I came home on the plane with the children. I've been alone for fourteen years." If she is, Betty Cody does not show any bitterness. When her biggest hits hit the country, she was unable to "show herself", to promote, because of pregnancy or other reasons. Bitter, no, helpless, perhaps. The woman who once performed double shows with Hank Snow and Montana Slim, who was one of ten promoted by Colonel Tom Parker, who had Chet Atkins as a guitarist behind her must find it difficult to stay away, especially in the alone hours. "I've had offers to sing in places. I refuse, because I like to sing in good places. You know what I mean, where the people are nice and respectable. But I like everybody.

BETHEL—The Bethel Historical Society will celebrate its second annual Homecoming on Saturday, September 30. In conjunction with the celebration the Society will be host to the 470 Railroad Club of Portland.

The railroad club is sponsoring a Foliage Train on that date, between Portland and Bethel, and expects to be in Bethel about two hours or more.

All the business firms in town and the various organizations and churches are joining in on this day to offer different types of entertainment. There will be an art show, several antique displays, handcraft booths, refreshment booths, antique autos, and special sales in the stores.

There will be a Colonial Tea, served by the owner of the first house, in Bethel, to have electricity installed in it.

The train will be open for inspection during its stay in Bethel.

I'm a friend to everyone."

Dick Curless has helped talk her into singing again; tried to give her the courage and confidence. "He's so generous. For a big man, he's so gentle. It is a thrill to work with him. He is such a good person and such a talent, it's easy to go on his show."

She is not forgotten. Not long ago a letter came from a soldier, who asked where he could get more recordings. His buddies had voted her their #1 vocalist. They wanted pictures. "It was so nice. I had to answer him. He had left his 78 of Tom Tom Yodel at home in Kentucky because he was afraid he'd break it. I might run into him someday; you never know."

Betty Cody likes to talk about the happy events. Like her son Lenny insisting she return to Ottawa and play a coffee house engagement with him. Doubts crept, but she went. She played eighteen shows in six days to a packed house...following her son Lenny. Many did not think of her as Lenny Breaux's Mother, but as Betty Cody who had performed in Canada. Her eyes mist and hand gestures, "Lenny said, Mama, I told you, you'd fit in. They love you."

Denny is persistent too. Recently, he introduced her and before she knew what was happening, she was singing with the Flairs, whom she describes as "just beautiful. They can play anything."

She did four or five numbers. "They stopped dancing when I yodeled, come to think of it, who can dance to a yodel? I HAD A BALL!"

Lenny and Denny Breaux backed her on "Hopeless Woman," a single released in the Spring. Originally planned to be a family memento, the d. j's found it and it went on the charts, to the insistence of her fans. Written with the help of another Lewiston woman, Eva Fournier, Betty insists the song could be even bigger if it had the proper Nashville production and the depth it needs. She has more on tape. "I just don't have the money for the promotion. I've been in

The Androscoggin has a drainage area of 3,4060 square miles and has more falls, rapids and cataracts than any other river in the State which makes for more wonderful scenery and furnishes more power.

The Androscoggin has much to its credit in the industrial world. Whereas lumber and wood products have seemed to be predominant, there have been woolen mills, shoe factories and power plants along the river.

Of course, Maine lumber has played the leading role in furnishing a livelihood for thousands of people. Northern Maine is practically populated with Canadian immigrants have come to make a better life for their families, and in so doing have added to the economy and well being along the river.

Education, too, has found a good home on the Androscoggin. One of the oldest colleges in the country, Bowdoin College at Brunswick has sent many noted men into the world and there is Bates College in Lewiston also on the Androscoggin. From wigwams and college dormitories, the river has sheltered them all.

From mountains, wilderness woodlands, to fertile valley farms, to industrial cities, to tidewater bays the Androscoggin has it all, and although it is called the dirtiest river in Maine, it still is beautiful.

Maine Consumers Warned Against Septic Tank Hoax

A LITTLE KNOWLEDGE GOES A LONG WAY IN THE SEPTIC TANK BUSINESS. A recent article in the Portland Press Herald, dated August 6, 1971, warned consumers against the septic tank hoax. The article stated that many septic tank installers are overcharging and using inferior materials. It advised consumers to get multiple quotes and to check the credentials of the installer. The article also mentioned that the Maine Department of Environmental Protection is aware of the problem and is working to protect consumers.

lady stood. Her words echoed, "I never get nervous. When they say my name, I think, well, here it is, that's me, I'm on." It doesn't matter if the audience is hot or cold. She usually finds one person in the audience to sing to. "I like them to feel happy with me, join with me."

They are happy. Her Majesty pleads HELP ME MAKE IT THROUGH THE NIGHT. A yodel is belted. Voices hush; hands clap time, toes tap, the stage bounces as she sparkles, bubbles and almost sizzles her way around bottle of soda.

She wants to sing again. As Joe Roy of WCOU remarked, "I've known her for years. She's always been the nicest and most wonderful person in the world. As an entertainer, she is terrific. She is way ahead of her time. If she hadn't had her mind on raising her family, she would be one of the tops today. That's why I think she's such a fine person. She's raised some talented, talented nice kids. I think she should come back because I think country music needs her. As far as I am concerned, she is just HER MAJESTY."

Joe Roy, you know, you're right.

"I love everybody—I like them to be happy with me..."

US RAM

possible backing, and the force of a blow was distributed by this means all over the ship instead of being borne by the stem alone. The transverse frames of the vessel were spaced four to six feet apart, and her inner shell or hull was further sub-divided by bulkheads that were water tight, giving greater strength to the ship, as well as rendering her practically unsinkable.

Two feet of space between the half inch plate bottom of the ram and the inner shell laid on top of the longitudinal was divided into 72 water tight compartments, connected with sluice valves which could be opened and shut at will from the hold of the vessel.

In certain of the compartments were set Hitchcock valves, 40 in all, which could pump water into the shell through holes eight inches in diameter made for the purpose, several feet below the water line. The water could be forced out of these compartments almost as quickly as it could be let in.

With all the compartments full the ram would settle until her deck was entirely covered to a depth of from six inches to a foot. It was not intended that all the compartments should be trimmed at once but that the vessel should be trimmed when ready for action, so that the "knuckle" should be under water about a foot. Two large tanks at stem and stern could be filled with water as needed to keep her on an even keel.

Air tight bulkheads along either side of the vessel were to introduce an element of buoyancy and contained enough air to prevent vessel from settling too low in the water should all compartments and trimming tanks be filled once.

Little of the deck equipment showed when the ram submerged. As a defense against light craft, such as torpedo boats, the Katak carried four six-pound rifles.

It was anticipated that would probably suffer should she ever enter engagement (which she not), for she offered but a target being so nearly under water as she was with the part exposed so that a square impact shot was impossible.

The ram was protected armor of varying thickness.

The engines were separate compartments each was wholly independent of the other.

The Katakadin was in time completed, throughout the naval there was widespread curiosity as to whether vessel on such original would be a success. Her trips developed, she had defects excepting in their speed, and for this builders were not responsible as they had constructed craft strictly in accordance with the specifications of government named in contract.

It was only by a fraction of a mile that the ram failed to come up to the requirements of 17 knots. Congress by special act authorized the Katak acceptance.

Telstar Regional High School defeated Livermore Falls, 7-6, in a hard fought, well-played game at Mountain Valley Conference.

The Rebels won the game before an estimated 1,000 fans at Livermore Falls. A 1-0 lead by Olson in the third period was the winning margin in a closely fought duel.

The Andies made a big play with a fourth period goal which ended on the Rebels a third down fumble which was recovered.

Livermore Falls got on board first with a 58-yard play in the second quarter when Gary Hanson punned from the one. The pass conversion failed.

Telstar went 43 yards in a drive and Pat carried over from the "keeper" to set the stage for the decisive play.

Hanson picked up more yards rushing to power the offense and linebacker DuPont was the defensive star in Livermore Falls. Way carried the offensive. Telstar and the Rebels exchanged touchdowns in a fine performance. Telstar's Rebels will represent the Academy in Saturday afternoon action this week.
